An important source for the history of the Dutch East India Company (VOC) and for the political and economic history of Asia more generally is the “Dagh-register” of Batavia Castle, the VOC headquarters in Asia published by the Batavian Society of Arts and Sciences. It is a day by day chronological of events that took place in Batavia and of news received from all quarters concerning the greatest variety of subjects. The board of governors of the VOC, had ordered this diary to be kept and sent to them on a regular basis to keep them informed of all matters that might affect the Company. Giving not only a day-to-day record of events in the capital of the Company's empire, but also a meticulous account of the ships entering and leaving Batavia together with very detailed reports of all the news these ships brought from all those parts of the world with which the Company maintained contact. .

Cornelis de Houtman (1565 - 1599), brother of Frederick de Houtman, was a Dutch explorer who discovered a new sea route from Europe to Indonesia and managed to begin the Dutch spice trade. At the time, the Portuguese Empire held a monopoly on the spice trade, and the voyage was a symbolic victory for the Dutch, even though the voyage itself was a disaster. Houtman was also a spy, having worked against the Portuguese by bringing back to the Netherlands privileged nautical information obtained during his stay in Portugal.

The Ceylonese Plakkaatboek brings together the edicts, ordinances and other laws that the Dutch government issued in Ceylon between 1638 and 1796. The edicts are an important source for the history of the island in that period, including dealing with the agricultural and commercial policy of the Dutch government, the registration of real estate, public order and safety, family law matters such as inheritance and marriage and on religious politics. In this edition, the edicts are preceded by a detailed introduction to the history and organization of Ceylonese law in the relevant period.
