Halæ Magdeburgicæ [Halle an der Saale]: Typis Joh. Christiani Hendelii, Acad. Typogr., [1729]. In Latin and Greek. 4to. 175 × 145 mm (6.75 × 5.75 in.). 22, [2] pp. Woodcut head-piece and initial. Old index tab, numbered “25” in manuscript, near the gutter on the title page verso.

Edges of title page trimmed close, with some loss to text on the right margin. Pages toned, with faint spotting on some leaves. Bound in modern marbled Italian paper.

Medical treatise on how defects in clothing—especially those that are more luxurious—are responsible for the spread of deadly disease. The author argues that clothes, while of divine origin and meant to protect humans, become deadly when used in excess (“sed peccat omnino in luxuria”) on the fragile human body. Women who are pregnant or nursing, the author further states, are especially susceptible. Closes with five poems in Latin and German praising the author written by fellow students. Alberti was a prolific medical scholar of the early 18th century and authored several tracts on the therapeutic uses of the imagination, a strand of medical thought that has been compared to holistic medicine (Rydberg). At the time of cataloguing, OCLC locates only two copies in the U.S.

Some wrinkles to the first and final leaves. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

Medical dissertation on hair, with sections on physiology, pathology, and treatment for diseases. Hair color is said to be determined by climate; baldness and gray hair are among the afflictions; diets, balancing of the humors, and mercury are among the remedies offered. Baier was a physician who taught at Altdorf, led the Leopoldina Academy of Natural Sciences, and was a personal physician to the Holy Roman Emperor. He remembered mostly for his research on and collection of fossils.

Thesis on various restrictions to the right to enter into matrimony. The author begins by defining marriage as a transfer of a woman as property into the possession of a man. This is followed by various deviations to this norm, such as celibacy (which the author claims is always voluntary for men, always involuntary for women), polygamy, and adultery.

Good with old water stains to first gathering. Title page trimmed a little close to the right margin. Removed from a larger volume. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

Legal dissertation on the history of usury in Germany. OCLC lists only one location in the United States. Böhmer was an accomplished lawyer and legal scholar and a mentee of Samuel Stryck who succeeded Stryck in his academic post. Böhmer was greatly influenced by the Enlightenment and his legal works were very influential. His work on the Pandects led to the development of German law beyond Roman law, laying the foundation for the laws of the Prussian state.

Some spotting to the frontispiece and first few leaves, but otherwise a Very Good copy. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

Treatise on libel, first published 1733, by a popular jurist. An interesting text discussing liability arising from paintings and illustrations (“Schand-Gemählde”). The frontispiece depicts corporal and capital punishments for those convicted of libel and slander, including flogging, hanging, decapitation, and beheading. In one of the panels, two men are depicted eating the excrement of animals. This is an example of potential libel from an illustration. Only two locations in the United States reported by OCLC.

Foxing to leaves and some ink offsetting, but otherwise a Good copy with untrimmed leaves. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

A medical dissertation warning against mysterious medications that are excessively praised. Clarin opens with a brief discussion of Anton van Leeuwenhoek's research on sperm and closes with a call for more scientific forms of determining the effectiveness of medicine based on the experiences of doctors rather than endorsements. Though few works by Clarin survive, his advisor, Georg Detharding, was a prolific author and well-known physician from a celebrated medical family. OCLC reports only two locations in the U.S.

Good. Pencil and ink inscriptions on the title page. Stains on page [8] of the preliminaries. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

A legal dissertation offering a systematic study of inscriptions on tombs and their relevant laws, such as rules against defacing or removing inscriptions from tombs. Diez separates epitaphs into four categories: those that honor, those that dishonor, those that are comedic, and those that are clever. Includes a transcription of the Bologna Enigma. The dissertation is followed by several examples of epitaphs transcribed by the author. The volume closes with congratulatory poems in Latin and German by the author's colleagues. IN FAVOR OF THE RULE OF KINGS

Per consultissimum I.v. Doctorem, Do. Carolum Moliæum, antiquum Franciæ, nunc Germaniæ quoq[ue] Iurisconsultum, Illustrissimi vvirtembergensis Ducis Consiliarium, & Iurium professorem primarium Tubingæ. Elenchum contentorum pagina sequens indicat.

Tubingæ [Tübingen]: [Ulrich Morhart d.Ä.], MDLIII [1554]. In Latin. 4to. 184 × 144 mm (7.25 × 5.75 in.). [20] ll. Woodcut initials. With the final blank leaf. Imprint from VDI6. Ink stamp on title page: "Bibliothec. P.R. Stuttg." With a second deaccession stamp: "Verausserte doublette."

Minor damp stains along the edges of a few pages. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

A collection of speeches delivered by the French jurist during his time teaching at the University of Tübingen. There are 58 separate speeches on topics from civil law, the rule of kings (for his critiques of feudalism and favor toward monarch many consider Dumoulin a forerunner of absolutism), and critiques of scholasticism, especially Thomas Aquinas and Gabriel Biel. Each entry is separated by a cross and noted with an Arabic numeral printed in the margins; otherwise laid out as a continuous paragraph. Interestingly, some of the speeches have been left out of the table of contents. Dumoulin had a promising start as a lawyer in the parliament of Paris. He converted to Protestantism and lived in exile for many years, traveling throughout western Europe taking up temporary posts in the law faculties of various universities (such as Tübingen) until he returned to Paris in 1557. His works were censored and deemed heretical by both Catholics and Protestants. Scarce; only four locations in OCLC, all in Europe.

Medical thesis on the consumption of milk by humans, and its nutritional and medical benefits. With several notes on lactation and how milk is produced in the body. Günther argues that nipples in males were purely decorative (though he notes some recorded instances of male lactation). The work is introduced by a lengthy text from the Praeses as well as a poem by Günther. OCLC reports only four locations in the US.

A dissertation on the Cyperus papyrus plant, also known as the paper reed, which grows along the banks of the Nile River and has been used for many things by humans throughout history, including the production of the earliest forms of paper. The author provides a detailed description of the plant and its important place in human history. The tract closes with moral arguments around the plant based on a reading of Isaiah 19:7 and cites the presence or absence of the papyrus plant as evidence of God's favor (or disfavor).

Mathematics thesis presented on August 30, 1773. The author presents numerous ways of measuring the surface area of different shapes with curved borders. The title page is missing but the ink has offset onto the verso of the preceding leaf, allowing the work to be identified.

Not in VD18, though we note one copy at the Staatsbibliothek Bamberg (OCLC #633390337); OCLC gives a second location at Bayerische Bibliothek but no copy is listed in their catalog.

Good. Pages toned, but clean. Wrinkling and minor damage to last page. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

First edition of this important legal treatise denouncing witch trials and torture. Oldekop was one of the earliest to make his criticisms public through a printed work published under his own name.

In 1635, the German jurist Benedikt Carpzov published his Practicum rerum criminalium, which became a major source for German criminal law. Carpzov argued torture was necessary for extracting confessions of witchcraft, even in cases where suspects appeared to be innocent. Carpzov was frequently cited as an authority in German jurisprudence and is frequently referenced by students in the dissertations of his time. He and his work are credited with intensifying the use of torture in criminal cases throughout the Holy Roman Empire in the late 17th century.

HALBERSTADII,
TYPIS ANDREAE COLWALDI,
ANNO M DC LV.

Hi

Oldekop was not the first to denounce torture, which was especially common in witch trials and led to the brutalization of countless women throughout Europe. Oldekop's treatise is notable because it was both published under his own name and levels a critique squarely at witch-mongers like Carpzov and the consequences of their legal theories. Two important predecessors in anti-torture literature were Anton Praetorius and Friedrich Spee, but their works were first published anonymously or pseudonymously. Oldekop circulated his stance against witch trials and torture at a time when Carpzov was a major authority in the legal world who drew on religious doctrine to claim that any criticism or disbelief in his theories itself constituted both a criminal offense and a sin.

Oldekop's work sought to reform the process for criminal trials, and here specifically discusses the right of the accused to appeal their investigation by an inquisitor. Torture, he believed, was unjust and produced unreliable or outright false confessions. Among the arguments he makes is that the appeal of the accused could be concurrent with the investigation during which the accused would likely be subject to torture (as was the case in Oldekop's most famous defense in 1661 of Gerthe Schmidt, who was accused of infanticide and tortured numerous times when investigation failed to turn up evidence in support of the accusation). Oldekop also argues for the importance and validity of the testimony of those who underwent interrogation by inquisitors. Oldekop appends seven questions to his treatise, many of which focus on torture and what to do if the accused is killed during interrogation.

For his direct challenge to the legal and religious doctrines put forth by Carpzov, Oldekop is considered a forerunner of the Enlightenment and its later challenges to Church authority and reforms of the state. His impassioned case for the rights of the accused and against the use of torture make him and his treatise an important antecedent of modern human rights.

Treatise on theft, thieves, and related forms of delinquency that draws heavily on classical sources and cites many contemporary authorities, such as Benedikt Carpzov. The treatise is well-organized, with each of its four chapters preceded by a numbered summary of contents. Rhoden begins by defining the types of crime he is investigating and follows with a series of recommendations for prevention; this includes the need for city leaders to effectively manage idle (otios) and transient classes of people by surveilling them, claiming that earlier studies have shown that too much leisure and too much freedom of movement encourage crime. The final chapter is devoted to punitive measures to complement preventative ones; punishments include public service, whipping, flagellation, and (most severe of all) exile. Rhoden was among a school of jurists known by the phrase “usus modernus pandectaru”, which means “modern uses of the Digest.” This school of legal thought was named after a work by Samuel Stryk, who supervised Rhoden on this tract. This school asserted the continued relevance of ancient Roman law to the Holy Roman Empire, and in doing so helped preserve the study of law based on Roman texts (Corpus Iuris Civilis) and supported an antiquarian interest in ancient Roman society and customs.

Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

Posthumous edition of a treatise denouncing Themistius, the Greek philosopher and statesmen. Themistius's political career coincided with tumult in the Roman Empire between early Christianity and Hellenism. Schelwig targets Themistius's position that Hellenism and Christianity were both modes of a single divine order and individuals were free to choose which they prefer. This is linked to a critique of polygamy and defense of monogamy. OCLC reports 8 locations, seven in Germany and one in Poland.

Minor damage to head and edge of title page not affecting text. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

A theological dissertation, in which Stein (a pastor and teacher in Karlsruhe) closely analyzes Genesis 49:10. The verse refers to a scepter and to Shiloh, which are here interpreted as symbols: the former of Jewish legal authority and the latter of the Messiah. Stein discusses the transfer of Jewish legal and legislative power throughout the Babylon Captivity and era of the Sanhedrin, and argues that Jesus was the prophesied Messiah. Christianoburgi: [publisher not identified], MDCCLXII [1712]. In Latin. 176 × 144 mm (7 × 5.75 in.). 4to. 16 pp.

Minor insect damage to gutter of first two leaves not affecting text. Several pages lightly wrinkled. Bound in modern Italian marbled wrappers in green, black, and gold.

A rare tract espousing strong anti-semitic content accusing Jewish people of being a poisonous element in society. The work is written to resemble the academic dissertations and disputations that were circulated at that time and is organized into several theses with numerous citations throughout. The imprint is fictitious and a pseudonym is used for the author's name. The title refers to an old German saying (appointing a goat to be a gardener) warning against appointing someone to look after something which they have a motivation to destroy. The goat motif was also commonly used to symbolize the Devil, blasphemers, and others perceived to be opposed to Christianity. OCLC lists only four locations, all in Europe; none in the UK or US.

PROOEMIUM

Emo est, qui nesciat, historiae in omni disciplinarum genere utilitatem prorsus insignem esse. Cum enim historia sit scientia, rerum praeteritarum seriem ob oculos ponens, non solum in aliorum errores inquirere, eosque corrigere, sed et eorum ueritates inuentas probare, magisque perpolire inde discimus. Si ulla uero res alia ad accuratam rerum olim gestarum notitiam probare fane eiusque diuisionis antiquissimae cognitio non una se commendat utilitate. Nec adeo immerito CEL. SCALIGER in Tract. de emend. temporum Lib. I, p. I. Si uerum est, quod sciuit Stoicorum schola, tempus esse normam memoriam ac diuinitatis index atque examen est, et rerum gestarum antiquitatem retrahere temporum posteritati tuetur: ii non uulgari laude digni sunt, qui rationes conscribere, atque fugitiuam antiquitatem retrahere DEVM debeo, cum PATRONORVM, eorumque, quibus uitam post hoc quicquid est negotii suam publico ad impetrandam dignitatem academicis specimine reddam, hoc quicquid est negotii suam philosophicam rationem reddam, hoc quicquid est negotii suam scipi, et praesens de calendario ueterum Hebraeorum specimen exhibere statui. Non equidem diffiteor, trepida me mente manuque calamum arripuisse, cum scripta, parum felici ingenio nata, et rudia, ut aiunt, penicillo adumbrata, ad blattas tineasque relegari non ignorem. At si non elegantiam, saltem breuitatem lectores delectaturam esse confido.

Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

Legal dissertation on the laws of consanguine marriage (marriage between people who are closely related), arguing for what sorts of conjugal relations are and are not permissible under law. There are several diagrams illustrating familial relations to illustrate the theses. The author argues against certain non-procreative sexual intercourse, but allows others (for example, sex between men is forbidden but sex with women who are already pregnant or can no longer get pregnant is allowed). OCLC reports only one location outside of Europe, in the US.

Good. Trimmed close to the top margin. Right edge of title page trimmed 7mm short, not affecting text. Removed from a larger volume. Bound in modern Italian marbled paper.

Dissertation on the natural law of marriage. In 24 sections, of which the final seven are devoted to defining divorce. Several arguments are put forth for why divorce is not justified, specifically in cases of sterility (“inaptitudo ad copulam”) and spousal abuse. The author argues specifically against the positions of Hugo Grotius and John Milton on divorce. OCLC reports only one location in the US.
