The 1890 edition was not issued in dust jackets, and they are rarely seen for this edition, especially in such fine condition. One of the best and most important works on Abraham Lincoln, a seminal biography and collection of the President's papers long before they were collected in print elsewhere. John G. Nicolay was Lincoln's private secretary and John Hay was assistant secretary and Lincoln's final secretary. They determined to write a history of Lincoln's life and times. Hay kept a diary and Nicolay made notes, both with the full cooperation of the President. Robert Lincoln gave them full access to his father's papers. "The strictly biographical part of Nicolay and Hay has high merit. One who reads the book today soon comes to suspect that many of those who have written disparagingly of it either have never read it, or have read it so long ago that they have forgotten what it contains. ... In addition to the merit which the book derives from the documentary material incorporated in it, it has other good points. The first volume ranks high as a biographical narrative. ... Nicolay and Hay remains a book to reward both student and reader. For the former, there are documentary material and the first-hand testimony of authors who were themselves participants in the events of which they wrote; for the latter, a history of the Civil War unexcelled in comprehensiveness." Angle, A Shelf of Lincoln Books.

322. NORTHROP, Lucius B. Autograph letter signed, 4 pp., to Jefferson Davis, dated Fort Gibson, 16 March 1840. $2000.00

Northrop was a close friend of Davis since their days as cadets together at West Point. Northrop served 10 years in the West; he was severely wounded (according to his biography, while following an Indian trail, but this letter shows it was accidentally self-inflicted). Back East on sick leave, Northrop studied medicine and began to practice in Charleston, SC, which led to his dismissal from the Army. Davis, when Secretary of War, reinstated and promoted him. Northrop resigned his commission when South Carolina seceded; Davis appointed him Commissary General of the Confederate Army. He later was appointed a brigadier general. His indifference to the fate of Union prisoners led to accusation that he was starving them, but Davis protected him from calls for dismissal until he was relieved of duty in February 1865.

"On the 9th of Dec., a pistol that was in my pocket went off, how, I know not, the ball entered my leg 4 or 5 inches above the knee, split the lower edge of the cap and concealed itself somewhere about the joint. I rode home and the next morning took up my abode in the hospital... Two days after, my life was given up from repeated spasms and threatened locked jaw. ... [Northrop also writes about his sadness over the death of his horse, "Jeff Davis,"] "I hope you have had good fortune with the young horse 'resembling me'. Of course, he had a big head & shaffy forelock, but I trust he was not lop eared. My usual fortune attended me. Jeff Davis one night ate some sour corn & when I saw him in the morning, he was frantic & soon died. One man had offered me any price. $300 cash was offered several times. He was gentle & spirited & beautiful ... He paced like a Narraganset, trotted like a Canadian, leaped like a hunter & ran like a race horse. I have never seen his equal...."

Peto was a member of the English Parliament known for his role in constructing the British rail system. He travelled to America at the end of the Civil War to explore commercial prospects. He considers American population, agriculture, railways, mineral deposits, manufacturing and commerce. He was particularly impressed with the abundance of resources, even in the wake of the Civil War's destruction. The book offers a great deal of detailed information about the American economy in the 1860s.

Parrish and Willingham 8529. II De Renne 664. Not in Turnbull. General Leonidas Polk, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Georgia and President James K. Polk's third cousin, was known as the Fighting Bishop. He was killed instantly by cannon fire as he, General Johnston, and General Hardee scouted enemy positions from atop Pine Mountain near Marietta, Georgia. This pamphlet contains details of Polk's final moments, as well as a report on the "funeral solemnities" and recollections of Polk's dual careers. Stephen Elliott, who gave the funeral address, was Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Georgia and Presiding Bishop of the Confederate States. He calls Polk "a Christian warrior" and sets forth his record of tireless military service to the Confederacy. Elliott asserts that "the complexion which this war was to assume was known to him long before it burst upon our country," especially its "ripening germs of irreligion, of ungodliness, of cruelty." Polk believed that the fight must be borne by, "Not merely the layman, but the priest." His life and death embodied that conviction.

Benjamin Dudley Pritchard (1835-1907) was a lawyer before the Civil War. He enlisted in the 4th Michigan Cavalry as a captain and was promoted to colonel after the Battle of Chickamauga. He married Mary Kent on 1 September 1864 while on a short leave. After Pritchard returned to his unit, Mary was injured in a railroad accident and spent the rest of her life in a wheelchair. Pritchard rose to fame as the commander of the unit that captured Jefferson Davis on 10 May 1865 in Georgia. After the war, Pritchard returned to the practice of law in Michigan. Though a national hero he avoided appeals to run for governor or congress.

Autograph letter signed, 3pp., to "Mary, My Dear Friend," dated Allegan, [Ohio], 17 August 1862. : I have become a man of war and have placed myself in the ranks of the great Army of the Union & have resolved to live under the Stars & Stripes or die fighting in their defense. I have become fully convinced that the time has come when every man should go who can go. I have raised a splendid company of Cavalry in this country and have it fully organized ... I hold the position of Captain, by choice of the Co."

"Our country still lives and Liberty is ours and by the blessings of our God thy husband has been chosen to place the foot upon the serpent's neck and today the arch fiend & traitor and main author of all our national woes lies a prisoner in my power ... On the night of the seventh inst. I was sent out of Macon with my Regt. ... with directions to go 75 or 100 miles from M. & take possession of all the ferries ... and to scout the country as far as possible with a view to the capture of Jeff Davis & other parties--which were known to be flying from Richmond for the purpose of reaching the Trans. Mississippi Department. At Abbyville 75 miles from Macon on the afternoon of the 9th I came upon the track of a train which I captured on the morning of the 10th near Irwinville about 100 miles SE of Macon and which proved to be a very important capture as by it we secured the person and family of Jeff Davis his P.M. Gen [John Reagan] Col. Johnson & Col. Lubbock of his military staff and Burton N. Harrison his private Secretary, Majr. Mauravel, Capt. Moody & Lt. Hathaway also the Brother & Sister of Mrs. D. five wagons & three (3) ambulances & quite a number of Private soldiers..."
