Small 4to, xvi, 143pp., coloured frontispiece portrait, 11 leaves containing 66 tipped-in samples of cloth, (most of which measure $1\frac{1}{2}$ " x 3"), illustrations, (a few in colour), original cloth, in slipcase, very good.

£65.00

Designed to be the first full-length history of bookcloth, focusing on the history of the Winterbottom Book Cloth Company, (for whom Tomlinson worked), and revealing the development of the industry from the earliest purpose-built factories in Lancashire and London through to the dominance of the handful of manufacturers which remain today.

All 71 of Winterbottom's designs are complemented by the 'feeler-samples' of both Victorian and more modern cloths, and these, along with the detailed descriptive catalogue of both cloths and designs provide a fine addition to the history of publisher's bindings.

'This is a valuable and authoritative account of an industry' - Bernard C. Middleton.

'This valuable and fascinating book, long-awaited by those interested in the history of publisher's bindings.. contains a considerable amount of information not available elsewhere. This welcome book now takes its place along with writings by Sadleir, Carter, Joseph W. Rogers, Ruari McLean, Douglas Ball and Sue Allen....' - G. Thomas Tanselle.
