Thesis. - François Tack was the leader of a V.O.C. delegation to Susuhunan Amangkurat II, ruler of the kingdom of Mataram, who held court in Kartasura. The aim of this mission was to make a settlement concerning the money the Susuhunan owed to the V.O.C and to ask for extradition of Surapati, a former Balinese slave, who raided the countryside south of Batavia and who had sought refuge at the court of Amangkurat II. The Dutch who thought of Surapati as a murderer, never succeeded to capture him. The Javanese on the other hand thought of him as a warrior for freedom. The story of Surapati's life is told in the Javanese text Babad Kraton.

The publication of 459 accurate drawings in colour and at natural size is a great asset to tropical botany, because many were never illustrated and still more never in their natural colours. In addition I hope that also the text, the figures, the photographs, and the captions contain observations of sufficient interest to botanical colleagues outside Java. Quite a few of the plants depicted range widely from tropical Asia to tropical Australia' (Preface by the author).

The title of his book, Life in the Dutch East Indies, seems innocent enough, but at the turn of the century it caused the blood of many people in the Indies to boil. A contemporary accused him of having 'dipped his pen in vitriolic acid'. Indeed, no book on the Indies so unreasonable and so rancorous as this has ever appeared before or since' (Nieuwenhuys, Mirror of the Indies, p. 134).
