"Coordinates of Cordoba Observatory" written in pencil in cartouche, small stain affecting linen backing at one fold intersection. Overall very good condition.

E.H. Faure y M. Alcantara. Buenos Aires. 1919.

Map of the Provinces of Formosa and Chaco by Enrique H. Faure (Civil Engineer-Ex-Chief of the Commission for the Study and Construction of the Railroad between Formosa and Embarcación) and Marian Alcantaro (Cartographer). Lithographed by J. Pueser Buenos Aires, Argentina 1919. The focus of the map (dated 1919) is the contentious rail line between Formosa and Embarcación, Argentina, which gained world fame as the rail line having the longest roadway constructed in a straight line. The map shows in great detail parcels of land with names of owners etc. There are several inset maps and tables including: Villa Formosa; Esquema de la Red Ferroviaria (Railway Network Scheme); Resistencia y Barranqueras. 1489 and two signatures stamped on one panel of the verso of the map. A most unusual map in excellent condition. $885.00 [49971] BOLIVIA) Germann, Franz (illus). Mapa de la Republica de Bolivia.

Color lithographed map of Bolivia comprised of 30 panels (each approximately 6.25 x 9.25 inches) on linen backing. Overall size approximately 45.5 inches x 38 inches.

Text in Spanish. Small amount of very light pencil markings to several panels; overall very good condition.

Friederichsen & Co. Hamburg, Germany. 1904. First Edition.

The Bulletin of the American Geographical Society, Volume 36: 1904 (page 695) describes Germann's map as follows: "This map is the best that has yet been produced of Bolivia as a whole... The map includes the results of Mr. Germann's ten years study in the field, supplemented by many other important sources of information. The vast spaces still white to the east and north of the mountain complex in the west show that the larger part of the country is still very little known... The situation and nature of all the mineral industries, the railroads in operation and projected, the telegraphs, salines, and much other information are clearly indicated." Significantly, the map depicts Acra, a region in the north-west, as belonging to Bolivia. Acra was of importance in the manufacture of rubber; however, threatened by the prospect of a devastating war, the valuable territory was ceded to Brazil through the 1903 Treaty of Petrópolis. Overall, an attractive and strongly delineated map; uncommon, in very good condition, reflecting an imminent loss of sovereignty over a portion of the country -- a circumstance endemic to the history of Bolivia. $535.00

Effingham Wilson. London. 1862.

"By Authority of the Monte Videan Government." A booklet evidently prepared for distribution at the Great London Exposition of 1862. Chapters include Memoranda for Emigrants: the Voyage Out; the Introduction, wherein it is written "The little knowledge possessed in Europe of the economical and political institutions of this fine country, have determined the publication of the geographical and statistical information contained in these pages"; following is the main chapter, The Republic of Uruguay, Monte Video, Geographical, Social, and Political which details climate, vegetable productions, trees (utility of), minerals, animals (race horses and fine wool etc.), institutions (hospitals, schools), land and water communication, post offices, commerce, summary of professions, details of the various departments, etc. There follows a chapter Life in the River Plate and a Catalogue of the Articles Exhibited in the Uruguay Department, International Exhibition, London 1862, with information on Jury Awards. A concluding piece discusses Land Sales and Profits in the River Plate. The rear cover quotes from the Times of August 29, 1862: "The Monte Videan territory - for it is better known by the name of its capital - is limited, but extremely fertile, well watered, possesses excellent pastures, an abundance of minerals, as yet unexplored... The deficiency of labour is so great that any man who offers is hired as a shepherd, at wages equal to about £40 per annum, besides rations. This rich and healthy territory, which could easily maintain a population of 2,000,000, probably does not contain 200,000." The four maps in the volume are 1) The World (Route from the United Kingdom to the River Plate) 9 x 11¼ inches; outline coloring of South America and the British Isles. 2) Banda Oriental Republic of Uruguay; Route from Monte Video to Mercedes Estancia Maua: 9 x 5 3/4 inches w/ outline hand color. 3) Valley of the River Plate, Monte Video to Mercedes: 5 3/4 x 9 1/2 inches with outline hand color. 4) Estancia Maua, Mercedes, Monte Video 1862. Plan of the Estate of his Excellency Snr. Baron De Maua in the Republic of Uruguay: 11 1/2 x 9 3/4 inches with outline hand color. Modest discoloration to front and rear boards but overall a scarce guidebook associated with the Great Exhibition of 1862 in remarkably good condition. $750.00
