First edition.

The book includes 234 letters by Euler Leonhard (1707–1783) to Friederike Charlotte of Brandenburg-Schwedt, the Princess of Anhalt-Dessau. The letters were written between 1760 and 1762. Euler was invited to the Imperial Russian Academy of Sciences in Saint Petersburg. He stayed in Russia from 1727 to 1741 and then from 1766 till his death. He buried in St. Petersburg.

In 1741 he temporarily moved to Berlin at the behest of Frederick the Great of Prussia. Euler took up a post at the Berlin Academy and remained there until 1766. At that time Euler was a ‘letter’ tutor of Frederick’s niece, the Princess of Anhalt-Dessau and wrote to her the letters about the most varied subjects (physical science, astronomy, music, logic, theology and philosophy). After his return to St. Petersburg, he compiled and published this lectures.

The work has become the most widely read Euler’s work, the classic of ‘popular science’ of XVIII century and made science accessible to a wide range of readers. For example, ‘the structure of the human eye, the eye of an animal and the artificial eye, or camera obscura’ were accurately described. It was important to Euler, who had problems of vision.

Lettres... was translated into Russian, English, German, Spanish, Italian, Dutch, Danish, Swedish and had gone through several dozen printings.

This edition was coincided with the 50th anniversary of the death of Mikhail Lermontov (1814–1841), a Russian Romantic writer, poet and painter, and ‘celebrating his liberation from copyright’. The text was checked and corrected according to Lermontov’s manuscripts by the curator and the head of the Lermontov Museum at the Nikolayev Cavalry School Narciss Bukovskiy (1847–?).

Eighteenth well-known artists of the time were involved in the design of the book. Most of the illustrations were prepared by a painter Leonid Pasternak (1862–1945), the father of the poet and novelist Boris Pasternak.

One of the most mystic painters and Russian symbolist Mikhail Vrubel (1856–1910) was also invited. At that time no one took him seriously. ‘Vrubel’s illustrations for that edition were revolutionary for the time, and exerted considerable influence on the new generation of Russian artists’ (Riasanovsky. California Slavic Studies. 1977). Vrubel created magnificent images of the demon to the same-name poem, which suited to the Lermontov’s poetry as no others. For the leading artists of the day this edition was ‘a competitive event’ and they vied with each other ‘in making a significant contribution to it’.

The additional third volume was published only in 1899. It is include youthful works and correspondence of the poet.

OCLC locates a copy in the BnF.

The Four Gospels

8. Tolstoy L. Soedinenie, Perevod i Issledovanie Chetyrekh Evangeliy [Harmonization, Translation and Research of the Four Gospels]. 3 vol. in 2 books.
Moskva, Posrednik, T-vo I.N. Kushnerev, 1907-1908.
In publisher’s wrappers. In good condition, uncut; 1 vol. - uncut, corner of the front cover repaired, stain to the front cover, 2 vol. - losses to spine, foxing.

Lifetime edition. This is the most rare Four Gospels... edition, especially in complete set. Banned edition.
First volume limited to 6 200 copies, second - 5 000 copies.
Tolstoy was excommunicated from the Orthodox church because of his interpretation of the Gospel.
Tolstoy specially prepared the second and third parts of the work for this edition. The first volume was seized on October 1907. By this time, most of the copies was sold out. The second and third parts (in one volume) were published in June 1908 and almost immediately the book was seized at the printing house. Publishers have received only a small part of copies. At the same time, the first volume was banned again. Even after Tolstoy’s death, remain copies in the printing house were destroyed under a court decision.

OCLC locates four copies of these two volumes in the US: Stanford University, University of North Carolina, University of California, Library of Congress.

9. [Грибоедов Александр] A.S. Грибоедов и Его Сочинения [A.S. Griboedov and His Writings].

With applications. Sankt-Peterburg, E. Sercheskiiy, 1858. 8vo., [4], III, III, XLV, [2], XLV-XCI, 1-53, [2], 53-72, [4], 79-242, [4], 243-404, portrait, 4 pl.

In late XIXth century half-leather binding. In good condition, losses of leather on spine and corners, binding extremities bumped, small losses of paper on front cover, cracked on spine and hinge, traces of ink on cover, slightly stained to pages, bookplate ‘B KUSSEWIYZSKY’ on first page, trace of the bookplate on front endpaper.

The edition contained collected works of Russian writer and diplomat Alexander Griboedov, including his biography and critic articles.

One of the illustrations, which announced on the title page, was banned by the censorship.

Provenance: The book from the library of Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovich (1860-1919), the last son of Tsar Alexander II, adjutant general and a general of the Cavalry to his brother Tsar Alexander III. The supralibros of Grand Duke Paul is stamped in gold on the spine in the form of interlaced Cyrillic ‘П’ and ‘А’ under the Imperial crown. His library kept in his wife palace in Tsarskoe Selo.

In January 1919, the Grand Duke was shot by the Bolsheviks in St. Petersburg, together with other members of the Romanov family.

Under the bookplate on first page owner’s mark ‘N. Neklyudov’. Probably, it belonged to Nikolay Neklyudov (1840-1896), an owner of printing house. The Grand Duke bought the book after Neklyudov’s death and ordered a new binding.

The edition is rare even without such imperial provenance.

Extremely rare clandestine hectograph edition of Tolstoy’s The Kreutzer Sonata. This is the first novella in Russian about the marriage and the relationships between sexes.

After a long story of editing by the author initial text this eighth version (penultimate, finished in October 1889) has been rewritten by Tolstoy’s daughter, Maria, and delivered to St. Petersburg. At the same time Tolstoy reminded renouncing the copyright to the novella so it was illegally copied in the Posrednik publishing house at one night, from October 29-th to 30-th 1889. ‘Till Sunday 300 lithographed copies was ready...’ (Tolstoy. Polnoe sobranie sochineniy. T. 27. 1936). This text became a main for later hectograph editions, including our version that published nearly the other half of 1890. Our copy contains The Afterword (the fourth version) that was finished in April 6, 1890.

At December 1889, The Sonata was officially banned in Russia before any typographic edition appeared. After countess Sofia Tolstoy was received in audience by Alexander III to charge for the novella. The Sonata was published in the thirteenth volume of The Collected works (1891).

Such editions of Tolstoy’s works are predecessors to the Soviet samizdat (‘I-self-publish’), underground literature.

We couldn’t trace any other copy with the same pagination via OCLC. NYPL, BL and Harvard library have other variants of the novella printed the same way.

Moskva, zhurnal Budil’nik, tip. A.A. Karceva, 1887.
4TO, [8], 40 pp., 8 plates.
In original gilt lettered brown cloth, original publisher’s wrappers bound in.
Near very good condition, edges slightly bumped, owner’s mark on the front cover.

The text of the play is supplemented with rare photos of the performance by the Korsh Theatre. The play was performed on October 1886 with stylized theatrical scenery and costumes.

The Drama Korsh Theatre was established by Fyodor Korsh (1852–1923) and was opened in 1882. Tolstoy’s The Power of Darkness and Chekhov’s Ivanov were premiered at Korsh’s. The Theatre became the most technically advanced and the first totally electrified Moscow theatre.

At one of the photo we can see the actors Ivan Samarin, Mikhail Shchepkin and Grigoriy Ol’gin in the older version of the Maly Theater’s performance.

OCLC locates one copy in USA only, in the University of Kansas Library. Another copy is in the University Library of Humboldt-Universitaet zu Berlin.
