What can you expect from my latest Short List? There’s iconography: characters from Dickens, the first Russian parliamentarians, 1920s beauty queens, and the members of a New York bowling club. There’s Cicero from New Orleans, and Plutarch from Moscow. The English are made fun of in Bruges, while the Romanovs are made a fuss of in Sicily. There’s a lost performance of Mozart, revolutionary songs from Tsarist Russia, and a score given by Tchaikovsky to Fauré. Read about Rousseau’s relationships with women, George Bernard Shaw on the Soviet stage, and a century and a half of Quaker history. All that, plus the universal blueprint for modern conspiracy theories. And if you’ve had enough of reading, there’s even a magazine you can listen to instead.

I am pleased to report that I am now a member of the Antiquarian Booksellers’ Association. Perhaps see you at a book fair soon?

Plutarch

See of the manuscripts from manuscript in the Syndical Library is by the German scholar Christoph Friedrich Matthi. Years later he would be exposed as a book thief.
The historian Jules Michelet wrote that 'le vrai Rousseau est né de femmes'. This early piece of biography focuses on the philosopher's relationships with women, leaving us a fascinating work of biographical-literary analysis.
