38. The Lady's Last Stake.

Rare engraving. Sheet 490 x 630mm (19¾ x 24¾”). Trimmed to plate, several repaired tears, creasing, surface wear in edges. Messy. £280

A woman sits before a fire, on which playing cards burn. A man stands holding bank notes and jewels in his hat. Having lost at cards the lady is faced with a moral dilemma: be ruined financially or morally. On the floor is a letter from her husband sending her money, addressed to Charlotte and signed Townly. This is the first published version of Hogarth's painting of c.1759, originally entitled 'Piquet: or Virtue in Danger', commissioned by James Caulfeild, later 1st Earl of Charlemont. After completion, Hogarth retained the painting for a period in order to engrave it, but he was dissatisfied with the result so abandoned the project. The original is in the Albright-Knox Art Gallery in Buffalo, New York.

39. Liberty & Captivity. Proof.

Mezzotint. 680 x 550mm (26¼ x 21¼”). Some spotting and creasing, crack in bottom platemark. £280

A family in a prison cell, a suckling mother looking enviously at the house martins that have built a nest in the window. As the artist specialised in Scottish historical scenes it is likely that this depicts the family of a Jacobite. The painting was exhibited at the Royal Academy.

Frances Matilda "Fanny" McIan (c.1814-1897) was the first superintendent of London's Female School of Design, which was launched in 1842 to train women for industrial roles like porcelain painters. McIan expanded the curriculum to include more fine arts subjects, like oil painting and wood engraving, and was chastised for allowing her students to draw nude models.

40. Celadon and Amelia. From an Original Picture, in the Collection of Wm. Lock Esq.r. [&] Ceyx and Alcyone. From an Original Picture in the possession of Ryland & Bryer.

Fine pair of engravings, each 445 x 550mm (17½ x 21¼”). Repaired tear at top, small margins. £750
A pair of scenes about love and loss. In the first Celadon looks to the heavens with his arms outstretched in grief as Amelia lies dead at his feet. In the title area there is quotation from James Thomson's 'The Seasons'. In the second Alcyone stands on the shore, distraught with grief, supported by four nymphs as two others bring Ceyx's corpse ashore. There are four lines of their story from Ovid's Metamorphoses and Dryden's translation.

Richard Wilson (1714 - 1782) was the preeminent British landscape painter of the mid-18th century. The original of 'Celadon' is lost; 'Ceyx' is in the National Museum of Wales. Fagan: Celadon LVII VII of VIII; Ceyx LXV in between VI & VII.

An illustration of an American Aloe (Agave americana) in flower, with smaller diagrams of the flowers and fruits. Bottom right is an illustration of 'The Torch Thistle' (a cactus). The flowering was new in England, not only because these desert plants rare in England, but also because they flower only once, at the end of their 10-30 year lifespan. This agave belonged to John Cowell, a nurseryman of Hoxton, and is the first recorded flowering in England. In 1730 Cowell published 'The curious and profitable gardener... to which is added, An exact description of the great American aloe', in which he complains about Kirkall's unauthorised plate. The Torch Thistle was also Cowell's. Provenance: Sandys Family, Ormersley Court, Worcestershire.

Aquatint with hand colour. Sheet 515 x 685mm (20¼ x 27¾”). Trimmed to plate, bottom right corner snipped. £550

A scene from the Eighth Xhosa War (1850-3), with a column of soldiers attacked by Xhosa spearmen in a narrow ravine.

Lieut. Colonel John Fordyce had realised that the regiment’s usual scarlet tunics were not suited to African warfare, so issued his men with the olive canvas jackets shown here. He was killed at Waterkloof a month later.

The war is now best known for the wreck of HMS Birkenhead in 1852. The new recruits, many destined for the 74th, stood in rank as the women and children escaped in lifeboats, commemorated in the “Birkenhead drill” of Rudyard Kipling’s poem.

José Mariano Michena (1772-1852), a Spanish soldier who campaigned for New Spain’s independence from Spain during the Napoleonic Wars. After being sent to Spain, he fought in the Peninsula Wars (including the capture of Bayonne in 1814), before returning to Mexico when it became independent in 1822. After the abdication of Emperor Agustin de Iturbide in 1823, he was acting president until elections could be held, handing over power peacefully. Afterwards he was minister plenipotentiary to Great Britain, and travelled around Europe and the near East. In Arabia he bought coffee plants and successfully grew them back in Mexico, thus introducing them to the country.
